PANEL DISCUSSION

The panel discussion took place between four members led by TM Prabhakar: DTM Manasa, TM Giridhar, TM Bandana, and TM Kasturi.

DTM Manasa shared her experiences as a software engineer and during her master's studies at the University of Arizona. She mentioned that, unlike her peers, she did not encounter challenges during interviews, thanks to her Toastmasters involvement. In contrast, many of her fellow students struggled with placements and interviews due to inadequate soft skills. TM Manasa says that the first couple of years of your career are always a trial run for the rest of your career.

TM Giridhar recounted his journey of balancing work and study, revealing how his social and creative nature made the experience both enjoyable and fulfilling. He shared how his dual role as a student and professional was not just manageable but also highly rewarding.

TM Bandana shared her experiences as an Agile coach and yoga trainer, emphasizing the importance of lifelong learning. She believes that life becomes empty without learning. She had the opportunity to work as an Agile coach, during which she faced many challenges. For instance, during COVID-19, she had to interact with people virtually instead of in person. Additionally, she faced health problems that led her to join yoga classes. Eventually, she became a yoga trainer and continues to teach yoga. She finds excitement in overcoming challenges, advising others to "accept the challenge as an opportunity" and to "believe in your internal voice and follow your passion." TM Kasturi reflected on his experiences as a teacher, lamenting the loss of the strong teacher-student bond that once existed in the good old days. He emphasized that students should pursue their passion after completing their B-Tech, rather than seeking jobs solely for financial gain. "Money shouldn't be the priority," he advised. "Look for your calling."

TM Prabhakar concluded the panel discussion by highlighting the four key objectives from the book 'IKIGAI':

- Profession
- Passion
- Mission
- Occasion

The MCs took the stage once more, rekindling the energy in the room. They handed the stage over to the speech evaluators and the timer to share their reports.
